plus specific rules:
e.g., relevance and added value, not redundant, concise and focused, good scientific practice (sharing of draft results), acknowledgments

PPRI Guideline on Data Collection and Data Use for Research Purposes
For PPRI network members

Version 1.7, 17 April 2026

For review by the PPRI Advisory Board (until 8 May 2026)

This guideline outlines the rules and procedures for collecting, using, and sharing data within the PPRI network for research purposes. It clarifies procedures for launching PPRI network queries, conducting surveys and interviews, and outlines the responsibilities of PPRI members when initiating or contributing to research activities. Its purpose is to support high-quality research while adhering to the network's internal procedures and protecting the time resources of PPRI network members.

1. Introduction: Rationale and Scope

Rationale

The purpose of the PPRI Guideline on Data Collection and Data Use for Research Purposes is to explain to PPRI network members the rules and procedures for collecting data from PPRI and using and disseminating them for research purposes. The main methods of data collection for
